Description

Due Diligence Support in Germany: DNV GL was appointed to provide technical and regulatory due diligence support in the planned construction of a large transmission network in Europe. The overall purpose of the due diligence support was to:

- Analyse the regulatory and access arrangements, incl. revenue and tariff setting, capacity management and gas transmission balancing arrangements, that the transmission company is currently exposed to
- Review the current technical performance of the transmission company
- Project the development of opex and capex
- Assess how the risks can be mitigated
- Attend meetings with the management of the investors

In addition to preparing the Due Diligence Report, DNV GL provided support in the modelling of revenue requirements and their interfaces with the financial model run by the financial advisors.

Description

Detailed design of the future Swiss gas balancing scheme: In preparation of the liberalization of the Swiss gas market, DNV GL was contracted by the Federal Office of Energy (BFE) to conduct a study on the detailed design of the future balancing arrangements for the gas transmission system. The study covered the following aspects:

- Review of arrangements for cross-zonal gas balancing in several EU countries, and assessment of several proposals for cross-border balancing between Germany/France/Italy, on the one side, and the Swiss gas market, on the other side
- Development of recommendations on design of future balancing market and imbalance settlement system, based on conceptual analysis and numerical simulations.
- Analysis and recommendations on participation of gas storage in the balancing regime
- Design of high-level processes for gas balancing, from initial registration of network users / shippers to final settlement
- Development of recommendations on separation of tasks between transmission system operators and market operators

Description

Study on principal design of Swiss Gas Balancing Regime: As part of a major program for developing the basis for liberalization of the Swiss gas market, the Swiss Federal Energy Office (BFE) contracted DNV GL to prepare a study on the basic design of the gas balancing regime. The key activities under this project included the following:

- Comparative review and assessment of the role model and responsibilities for gas transmission system balancing in selected EU countries (Austria, France, Germany, Italy)
- Assessment of different options and development of recommendations on relevant roles and responsibilities in the future Swiss gas balancing mechanism
- Assessment of key requirements and relevant options for establishment of a virtual trading point
- Quantitative analysis of available sources for gas balancing
- Quantitative assessment of feasibility of daily balancing in the Swiss gas transmission system

Description

Study on Balancing: Changes of the European and Austrian legal framework required reforms of the Austrian gas balancing system, incl. a potential transition to daily balancing. DNV GL was commissioned by the Austrian regulator E-Control to perform study on the technical and economic feasibility of daily balancing. The study was based on detailed hydraulic simulations of the Austrian gas transmission network. Detailed network simulations were performed for several high load flow situations for different customer groups. Based on a review of the applicable European rules (Framework Guidelines, draft Network Code on Balancing), the technical analysis was complemented by a combined qualitative and quantitative assessment of the economic impacts, under consideration of the relevant impacts on individual stakeholders (e.g. balance responsible parties, TSOs) and the overall gas market. The recommendations of DNV GL were consulted with TSOs, shippers and other stakeholders and supported E-Control in designing the new gas balancing regime, which was subsequently implemented.

Description

Design Transmission Tariff System for Gas: The major task of this project for a European TSO was the design of an entry / exit system. The overall scope consisted of three major activities: • Conceptual design and calculation of entry /exit charges for the country's gas transport system. • Advice on development of suitable arrangements for gas balancing and imbalance settlement in the new entry-exit system • Report on major trading principles (Client as well as contract amount and exact period are confidential)

Description

Study on Methodologies for Gas Transmission Network Tariffs and Gas Balancing Fees in Europe: The scope of the study was to assess the existing European transmission tariff and balancing models, identify differences between them and analyse if such differences have a negative impact on barrier-free cross border trade. Besides comprehensive and in-depth research and analysis on the existing situation in the European gas markets, the study was also based on interviews with a wide range of selected stakeholders from various countries and groups of market participants, i.e. TSOs, regulators, traders, large customers and industry associations. Based on this, the study came to conclusions on the level and content of harmonised European legislation necessary to overcome these barriers.

Description

German Gas Balancing Market: A comprehensive DNV GL (legacy KEMA) study provided the basis for the design of new gas balancing system in Germany. The objective of the study was the development of a market-based model to organize the procurement of balancing gas and to provide fair and transparent imbalance prices, while being consistent with the new network access rules, the physical conditions in gas markets in general and the specific conditions of the German gas market in particular. DNV GL's recommendations provided the basis for the regulator's decisions on the design of the German gas balancing market, which successfully went live in October 2008.

Description

Study on entry-exit tariff access arrangements and establishment of new regulatory framework for gas transmission in Bulgaria: In order to implement the requirements of the Third Package of the EC, Bulgaria plans to amend the regulatory access arrangements. An essential element of the reform process is the establishment of transmission access based on the entry-exit model (tariffs, capacity management, balancing). Under the entry-exit model, capacity contracts for input and withdrawal are separated and independent of one another - there is no linked contract path. Service entitlement is to bring gas into the system (entry capacity) or to remove gas from the system (exit capacity), and such services can be obtained by the same or different network users. The main objective of this project was to assess the principal options for designing an entry-exit access arrangements and tariff system in line with EU and national legal framework and to provide recommendations for its implementation in Bulgaria. The recommendations developed by DNV GL (legacy organisation KEMA) took into consideration the conceptual properties of different options, international experience in several EU countries and the current arrangements in Bulgaria. More specifically they referred to transmission revenue setting, costs allocation and tariff design, definition of capacity products, suggestions for balancing mechanism. The conceptual work was supported by quantitative analysis using a tariff setting tool developed by DNV GL. Following the conceptual design of the new transmission regulation, DNV GL developed a new tariff ordinance for the Bulgarian gas transmission. DNV GL supported the consultation process between the regulator and Bulgartransgaz till the final legal enforcement of the new document.
